7.3.1 Institutional distinctiveness: CSR (Corporate Social Responsibility) Training & Placement Drive

CSR Training & Placement Drive

Our responsibility is to train and provide placement to the students which is the prime importance.

The main goals of a training and placement drive include:

- Skill development: To equip candidates with the skills and competencies that are in demand by the job market. This could involve technical skills, soft skills, or industry-specific knowledge.
- Industry exposure: Providing candidates with insights into various industries and job roles, helping them understand the different career options available to them.
- Networking opportunities: Creating a platform for candidates to interact with potential employers and industry professionals which can lead to internships, job offers, or valuable connections.
- Preparing candidates for interviews and selection processes: Conducting mock interviews, resume building workshops, and other preparatory activities to boost candidates' confidence and chances of success during the hiring process.
- Facilitating job placements: Assisting candidates in finding suitable job opportunities and connecting them with recruiters or companies actively looking for employees.
- Encouraging employer participation: Attracting companies and organizations to participate in the drive, thereby increasing the pool of potential job opportunities for candidates.
- Promoting a win-win situation: Providing employers with access to a pool of qualified and well-prepared candidates, reducing their recruitment efforts and helping them find the right fit for their job vacancies.
- In essence, the training and placement drive aims to streamline the recruitment process, enhance the employability of candidates, and foster mutually beneficial relationships between job seekers and employers.
