Best Practice I

Increased Employability of Students through Skill Development Programs

It's a fact that students emerging from Indian education system are lacking in the skills required by Industry. The gap between university curriculum and ever changing expectation of industries is the main cause for this situation. The curriculum of universities is theoretical in nature and remains unchanged. But the industry expects the graduates to be well prepared and equipped with the necessary skills. Other factors like communication skills, good personality and soft skills play significant role in the employability success rate. The principle and concept of the practice of employability enhancement skill is to inculcate communication skills, soft skills and domain specific technical skills as per expectation of industries. So the institute has taken the initiative to bridge a gap between the industry expectation from fresh graduates and graduate attributes acquired after undergoing university curriculum.

With the objective of increase in employability of students the institution concentrates on the following skills to be developed.

- 1) Technical skill development
- 2) Soft skill development
- 3) Industry Exposure
